

Final Arrangements

I suggest that the following wishes and arrangements be honored after my death.

Disposition of My Remains

Dispose of my remains however you like. I recommend the least expensive and easiest options. Like it or not, my dead body stopped being me when I died; it is now just a cadaver. You do me no honor by spending a penny more than necessary.

Ceremonies

Celebrate my life however you like. Why should I care? I'm dead!

I recommend foregoing a funeral and instead using that time and energy toward public service, perhaps by arranging a volunteer event. If you really want a funeral, knock yourselves out, but you should know that I hated funerals, funeral homes, churches, hymns, and sad music. Better yet, commemorate me by doing something fun and uplifting. Nobody will think twice when you start crying while riding a roller coaster at Cedar Point in my honor.

Obituary

If you publish an obituary, I'd recommend keeping it short and sweet. Just make sure you proofread it first, because you know proper spelling, grammar, and punctuation were always important to me.

Signature

I, Cory Jack Fryling, declare that I have personally written these recommendations, that they accurately reflect my desires for final arrangements after my death, and that you may follow, consider, or completely ignore them at your discretion.
